

Global Supply Chain Service Company rolls-out Safecom's Information Security Learning Management System (LMS).

Corus International, the global supply chain business, is rolling out Safecom's InfoAware for organisation-wide Information Security training.

Cambridge, UK, 31 July 2007. Safecom, the developer of the popular InfoAware LMS – e-Learning Management System, today announced that Corus International is commencing roll-out of its InfoAware LMS licence.

Corus International selected InfoAware as their Information Security LMS of choice. The video training modules purchased will be used to train staff at all levels throughout the company. In addition the LMS module is set to be used to track staff knowledge and understanding of training materials and to provide a full audit trail of who has successfully completed the training.

Graham Royle Corus International's Manager, Information Systems, stated: "We are delighted with Safecom's InfoAware product. With 70 offices in almost 50 countries the key challenge for us is to manage the complexity of delivering InfoSec training around a large number of geographically disparate offices in a consistent way. InfoAware helps us achieve this and is now a key element of our Information Security strategy".

James Williams, Safecom's UK General Manager, added "we welcome Corus International to the ever growing number of private sector customers using InfoAware LMS. As a company with truly global coverage we are particularly pleased they selected InfoAware to support their information security infrastructure. We are extremely pleased that they recognised and value the key strengths we have built into our InfoSec training package and hope that this is the start of a long-standing and productive relationship".

In recent months Safecom's has announced sales of InfoAware LMS to private sector customers including: hayes, macintyre, Groupama and Gemplus.
